“OUCH! Looks like you really took a spill this time! You are the clumsiest teenager I know!”

“Yeah, that’s me, Ms. Clumsy.”

“Last week it was your arm. Now your jaw is swollen...is that a bruise?!”

“Are you with the FBI now? Why are you always up in my business?!”

“I’m just sayin’...maybe you need a different exercise regimen.”

“Hmmph. What I need is a different...never mind. Let’s just drop it, can we?”

FACT:
National statistics, including reports from the Bureau of Justice Statistics, indicate that young women between the ages of 16 and 24 in dating relationships experience the highest per capita rate of domestic violence and sexual assault. An average of 28 percent of high school and college students experience dating and domestic violence at some point.

LET’S FACE IT:
No one wears dating and domestic abuse as a badge of honor. In fact, many victims are highly skilled at hiding it. Someone in your dorm, or your class, your sorority or fraternity, or even your family could be a victim of dating and domestic violence. But how would you know for sure?

FIND OUT MORE:
Plan now to attend “The Call to True Beauty” campaign week events, Oct. 25-31, 2010. Programs are free and open to the public. Each event is designed to educate and empower YOU! Go to www.cau.edu for the campaign schedule and more information.

FORWARD THIS EMAIL:
Forward this to everyone you care about, male and female. Dating and domestic violence is a crime that hurts everyone. It’s time to lift the kerchief of shame and silence!
