The history of Clark Atlanta University is inextricably linked to the history of our nation, its forward progress and change. From the very earliest days, our faculty and alumni--James Weldon Johnson and W. E. B. DuBois, for example--influenced not only the national community, but also the global community.

Of course, 100 years ago, members of the Clark Atlanta family grappled daily with the issue of access. Despite myriad obstacles--segregation, unfit facilities, dire economic constraints, they viewed their on-campus classrooms as portals to new and uncharted horizons.

Much has changed since then. Students today can access portals around the world with just the click of a button. However, all of the technology in the world still doesn’t preclude the personal, leadership experiences that should complement a quality educational experience. If we want students to learn, lead and change the world, then we must invest and channel the resources to give them the world.

The purpose of Friends of the Provost for Access and Excellence is to enable Clark Atlanta University to provide the best, transcendent learning opportunities for deserving students and “up and coming” junior faculty, and to ensure that the resources necessary to take full advantage of these opportunities are always available.

By supporting this critical need, you become an active participant in the development of America’s next generation of leaders. You also ensure that, upon assuming myriad positions of leadership, well-educated, well-rounded young men and women will be able to draw upon diverse global experiences and perspectives, allowing them to compete successfully in today’s global economy.

The challenges our students face can be daunting, but with our help they can become undaunted world leaders. All they need is...access and demonstrated excellence.
Your Support Means the World to Us.

Your tax-deductible contribution to Friends of the Provost for Access and Excellence will open up a world of opportunities for our student and faculty scholars. Still, there are other valuable contributions that will benefit deserving students and “up and coming” junior faculty.

More Than Just Money

We also want your time, talent, and your in-kind resources. In today’s specialized global economy, the opportunity for networking, internships, mentoring and hands-on experience with state-of-the-art technology often means as much as money. Your willingness to share your professional and civic expertise and experiences can open the door to new worlds for our student and faculty scholars.
