Wendy Lewis (2012) South Orange, New Jersey

Trustee Lewis is known for her keen ability to build action through intelligence, diplomacy, trust, and consensus-building. As McDonald's former Global Chief Diversity Officer and VP of Community Engagement, she launched the first-ever Global Gender Balance and Diversity Strategy across the enterprise. Her creation of the "Diversity IS Inclusion" mantra became ingrained throughout the business, resulting in an education framework that targeted the development of culturally intelligent leaders, suppliers, owner-operators, and partners. This led to the design and development of "Food for Thought: Moving Beyond Bias," which brought immediate value and was adopted globally. She was also at the forefront of some of McDonald's most visible programs, including flipping the arches for International Women's Day, strengthening the advancement of McDonald's Employee Business Networks and partnering across the System to advance supplier diversity and diverse franchising programs. Also, Wendy Lewis is the founder and creator of AllySHIFT®, a progressive and seismic platform for advocacy and sustainable equity. She is known for shifting the transactional to the transformative and considers herself an evangelist for Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Equity. Her company, Wendy Lewis, LLC, is a Diversity, Equity & Inclusion practice firm with a focus is empathetic leadership and "allyship sustainability." Prior to McDonald's, the majority of Wendy's career had been with Major League Baseball, where she was the first ever to hold a formal Human Resources Management role within professional sports as the head of HR for the Chicago Cubs. She quickly became known for promoting positive action through a multifaceted approach in gaining awareness, empathy, diplomacy, credibility, trust, and consensus-building, ultimately inspiring and guiding key stakeholders. It was during her early baseball years within the Chicago Cubs franchise that Wendy identified and developed a ground-breaking opportunity to extend the diversity and inclusion practices throughout the immediate organization and into the supply chain, partnerships, and communities. Her executive promotion to the Commissioner's Office for Major League Baseball expanded the scope and scale of her experience and achievements. Her strategic executions resulted in the creation of systems and collaborations that delivered in-depth analysis for the value proposition for the positive ROI. Wendy's integrated insights and deliverables produced MLB's transformational Diversity Economic Impact Engagement, a model for advancing MLB's workforce and supply chain initiatives league-wide. Also, she conceived and developed another first in sports--a centralized strategic planning process for D&I for MLB's 30 franchises, central office, MLB Network, and MLB Advanced Media. She spearheaded many innovative programs and events, such as MLB's Diversity Business Summit, the League's employment and procurement conference. The Summit resulted in new talent pipelines and business partnerships across all MLB entities. Also, she introduced the leadership of MLB's Executive Development Program, a two-year intensive rotational experience for selected participants to gain access and opportunity for successful careers in professional sports.
